

List of contributors

Clark Colahan is Anderson Professor of Humanities at the Whitman College, Walla Walla, Washington.

Tom Cutterham is a postgraduate student of Modern History at St. Hugh's College, University of Oxford.

Fernando Dores Costa is professor and researcher at the Department of History of the ISCTE-Lisbon University Institute. He is also co-author with Jorge Pedreira of the book D. João VI (Lisbon, 2009; Sao Paulo, 2008) and author of A Guerra da Restauração 1641-1668 (Lisbon, 2004). His research interests include the social history of the army and the representations of war in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. His latest article published in English, 'Army size, military recruitment and financing in Portugal during the period of the Peninsula War – 1808-1811', e-JPH, Vol. 6, Nr. 2 (Winter 2008) is available at www.brown.edu/Departments/Portuguese\_Brazilian\_Studies/ejph/html/issue12/pdf/fcosta.pdf.

Heather Ellis is a lecturer and researcher in British History at the Centre for British Studies, Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin. She recently completed her DPhil. at Balliol College, Oxford with a thesis project entitled 'Young Oxford: Generational Conflict and University Reform in the Age of Revolution.' Her main research interests are in the history of education, childhood and gender and she has been a co-editor of JOUHS since 2007. For more information, please go to <http://www2.hu-berlin.de/gbz/staff/ellis.htm>.

Bronwen Everill is a PhD student in History at King's College London, where she is supervised by Professor Emeritus Andrew Porter. She received her MSt in Archaeology from Oxford University in 2006 and her BA in History from Harvard University in 2005. She was recently awarded the 2009 Watt Prize by the Transatlantic Studies Association.

Tyler James Griffith received his B.A. in Classics and Medieval Studies at the University of Chicago in 2005 and a M.A. in Cultural and Intellectual History of the Renaissance at the Warburg Institute, University of London. After teaching history for a year at a community college in rural North Carolina, he completed an MSc in Enlightenment Studies at the University of Edinburgh, and extended his research with the MLitt program in Modern Thought at the Centre for Modern Thought, University of Aberdeen. Tyler's other research interests include topics such as: war and violence in the epic tradition, visual representations of authority, the university and the public sphere, 18th century Latin literature, and contemporary philosophy such as Blanchot and Deleuze.

Stephen G. Hague is a DPhil. student at Linacre College, University of Oxford. He was Executive Director of Stenton, the plantation house built by James Logan, representative of the Penn family in colonial Pennsylvania. His doctoral research focuses on material culture and the social strategies of the gentry in the west of England during the eighteenth century.

Lasse Heerten is a doctoral candidate at the Freie Universität Berlin. He has carried out studies for an MSt in Historical Research at the University of Oxford. His interests include Modern European and Global history, particularly the history of human rights and humanitarianism.

Graciela Iglesias Rogers is a DPhil. student in Modern History at Lady Margaret Hall, University of Oxford. Her doctoral thesis project is entitled 'British Liberators': the role of volunteers in the Spanish forces during the Peninsular War (1808-1814)...and far beyond. She is also a former Reuters fellow with a long career in journalism, and co-editor of the Journal of the Oxford University History Society since 2007. Her academic areas of interest are the cultural history of war and conflict resolution, as well as the role and contribution of diasporas in the Atlantic World during the long 18th and 19th centuries.

Christopher Lillington-Martin is an independent scholar who graduated from the University of Wales, Swansea and has since then worked as a teacher in Spain, Italy and the UK. He is currently reading for an MA at the University of Exeter. He lectures in Classics and Ancient History at The Henley College, Oxfordshire, England. With financial support of the Università degli Studi della Basilicata, the British School at Athens, the British Institute of Archaeology at Ankara, among other institutions, he undertook Procopius related research in Germany, Greece, Italy, Turkey and the UK which he presented at The Classical Association; the Institut für Klassische Altertumswissenschaften, Martin-Luther-Universität, Halle-Wittenberg; Niš University, Serbia; Symposia in Mardin, Turkey; 33rd Byzantine Studies Conference, Toronto; 7th TRAC / RAC Conference, London; University of Basilicata, Italy and the XXXV Symposium of Byzantine Studies, Oxford, among other events. He welcomes contact at chrislm@hotmail.com.

Philip Lockley is a fourth year DPhil. student at New College, University of Oxford. His doctoral thesis project is entitled 'Millenarian religion and radical politics in Britain, 1820-1840: a study of Southcottians after Southcott'. His research is conducted under the auspices of the Oxford University Prophecy Project (OUPP), a research project attached to the Faculty of Theology at the University of Oxford, exploring millenarian and prophetic religious movements from the eighteenth to the twentieth centuries.

Matthew Plowman (BA Dana College, MA University of Nebraska-Omaha, PhD University of Nebraska-Lincoln) is an Associate Professor of History at Grand View University in Des Moines, Iowa. His area of interest is the interplay between nationalism and imperialism in global rivalries of the 19th and 20th centuries. He currently works on the Indo-Irish-German Conspiracy in America during WWI that involves the wartime activities of Sinn Fein, the Hindustan Gadar Party, and German diplomats versus British intelligence in aid of American authorities. He is co-author of Inside the Fighting First (Nebraska, 2001) which portrays the multiple national identities of a Danish-American soldier during the Spanish-American War of 1898 and the Philippines War of 1899-1902.

Justin Reay is a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries (FSA) and a Fellow and Archivist at the Catholic academic project of St Bede's Hall, Oxford, England. He is currently editing the Bodleian Library's collections of Samuel Pepys' naval papers. After officer training in the Royal Navy and a long career in business, Justin trained as an art historian at Oxford and is now researching for a PhD in Maritime History at the University of Exeter.

Chris Sladen read Modern History at Oxford (Christ Church) in the 1950s, then worked in London in advertising, public relations and the civil service. He returned to Oxford in the 1990s to study for a Master's degree in Public History and Historiography at Ruskin College, Oxford. His Conscription of Fashion, about WWII civilian clothing, was published in 1995 (Aldershot: Scolar Press); his history of the Wallingford Farm Colony, featuring the two 'odd allies' mentioned in the current issue of this journal, awaits publication.

Katharine Sykes is a research fellow at the Oxford Centre for Medieval History and a member of Harris Manchester College. More information at: http://www.history.ox.ac.uk/medieval/research\_fellows/sykes\_katharine.html.

Sveinbjorn Thordarson graduated in analytic philosophy from the University of Iceland in 2006. After studying philosophy and the history of science at the London School of Economics 2006-2007, he completed an MSc in early modern intellectual history at the University of Edinburgh in 2008. He is currently a PhD student at the University of Edinburgh. His research focuses on the role of teleology in the metaphysics of nature in Enlightenment thought.